Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior at are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over the admitted prior art of the instant disclosure in view of Giraud et al and Okamoto. The admitted prior art of the instant (pages 2 and 3 for example) disclosure teaches that it was known in the art at the time the invention was made to provide a process and furnace for controlling the temperature homogeneity in a reheat furnace equipped with lateral burners where the burners are operated in "bang bang" mode and the stoppage time is adjusted to obtain desired temperatures, thereby showing all aspects of the above claims except the use of spread flame burners as the lateral burners or igniting the burners in an order which promotes swirling in the flue gas where the burner operation is controlled by a computer operatively connected to the furnace through sensors. Giraud et al teaches that in reheating furnaces it was known in the art at the time the invention was made to employ spread burners (12) as lateral reheat burners in order to further reduce temperature variations in a reheat furnace environment. Okamoto teaches that the use of computer controlled burners (see col. 4 lines 38-53 for example) fired in a controlled manner which would provide a swirling movement in the flue gases for optimum temperature distribution. Because even temperature distribution is an express objective of each of the above references, motivation to include spread burners as taught by Giraud et al as the burners of the admitted prior art of the instant disclosure, where the burner ignition and combustion is controlled in the manner recited by Okamoto in order to further provide optimal temperature distribution, would have been modifications obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Morimoto et al is also cited as a further example of prior art temperature and combustion control processes for burners.
